Hospitality and Tourism Strategic Management Programme

Introduction

Changing buyer behaviour, an increased amount of competition in the market place, greater access to new and niche destinations, increased customer expectations, currency fluctuation - the Irish tourism operator must have a global eye as well as local expertise. For tourism managers, from those working in hotels to tour operators and destination marketers, understanding this changing environment and having a definitive plan for the future will be vital.

This programme has been designed to allow senior tourism managers adjust their business strategy to meet future needs, tailor the experiences they offer to match prevailing trends, and focus their marketing activity to create a competitive advantage for their tourism business.

To address the challenges posed by the uncertainties of the tourism sector, organisations require executives with real leadership and managerial competencies. General & Senior Departmental Managers are critical to creating new strategies that will lead the tourism business in this uncertain environment, and take advantage of the possibilities that their competitors ignore.

To achieve this successfully, it requires excellent operational experience and competencies in the areas of strategy, sales, technology, marketing and finance, alongside ambitious leadership to make it happen.

The first of its kind and specifically tailor-made for the Irish market, The Hospitality and Tourism Strategic Management Programme will give senior level managers in the tourism industry a grounding in all these key areas. Participants will leave the course with a concrete, strategic plan for their business.

Our Graduates view:

“I wanted to understand what was really happening in the business, but never had the time to step back to look at it strategically. This programme gave me the impetus to talk to all the different functions in the business and find out what the challenges were. The business diagnostic tool focused in what we could actually do to meet those challenges.

The programme will have a big effect on the business over the next five years. Structural we will change, I will step out of the role I'm currently in and into a new operations role.”

Nicola McDonnell, Irish Whiskey Museum

“We faced a real directional challenge – where our company will be in 5-10 years – and I found the programme very beneficial for choosing the direction we want to go. The business diagnostic tool, while a challenge in itself, asks a lot of the hard questions but if you can answer them honestly it will give you a great plan going forward.

We can see a tangible improvement in our business as a result of the programme. The direct benefit we've seen already is growth in room rates and higher occupancy rates. The mentoring in particular was very good, and that process allowed us to give the strategic challenges the focus that they need but can sometimes be missed because of day-to-day operations.”

John O'Neill, Hamlet Court

“The networking has been a really important part of the programme. I've been in constant contact with the rest of the group and this peer to peer learning has been key to getting new ideas and shifting your own thinking.

The course has changed my thinking towards the tourism industry and what we need to be proactively attracting new markets and making our business stronger. I'd highly recommend going on the programme to anyone in the industry – it opens up your thinking.”

Niall Burns, Slieve Donard Resort and Spa

Our Graduates view:

“Certainly, we work differently today than we did at the start of the programme. For example, we now do regular strategy meetings with the senior management team, making sure we’re taking the long-view and see if plans are working or need adjusting.

The challenge for us was to formulate the strategy for the next five years, and the programme really helped with that.”

Stefan Lundstrom, Galmont Hotel Galway

“We were a very new business and a big challenge for us was simply the structure of the business and those coal-face issues. After the programme, we’re looking at a much broader view of our business and making sure it is a strategically structured organisation.

The leadership module, the business diagnostic tool, the strategic planning module - they will lead us to become a better company with a better structure.”

Sarah Baker, Cloughjordan House

“I was looking for the next stage in our business. We needed to stop being reactive and start planning strategically for the next five years.

We’ve now put a different slant on our operational procedures, looked closely again at our sales and marketing functions, and will be looking next at how the finance functions within the Cathedral, all because of the programme.

If you’re someone in an organisation thinking about ‘what next, where next’ and want to build a map towards it, this would be an excellent programme for you.”

Susanne Reid, Christ Church Cathedral
